You are being used as a battery — and the current is your life

Not a metaphor. A business model. And it is bigger than the feed.

The most sophisticated machinery ever built is pointed at the human mind, and it is not only the scroll. It is the series engineered to be unfinishable, the game tuned like a slot machine, the bet that whispers one more, the pornography that floods the circuits love was built on, the nightlife that sells belonging by the hour, the store that promises that the next purchase will finally be enough. Each one extracts something different — attention, energy, money, desire, effort — but they share one harvest: the hours of a human life, and the spirit that should have animated them.

The newest extraction is the quietest: thinking itself, outsourced. When the machine answers before the mind has tried, skills stop developing, judgment thins, and the person becomes a consumer of their own cognition. A culture that believes only matter exists has nothing left to defend against this — more stimulation, more convenience, more consumption is the whole religion. We are not weak. We are starved, and we are being fed sugar by experts.

But there is a memory underneath the noise. A memory of how it was when the shared values were love, family, compassion, friendship, home, nature, kindness, empathy — when a person was a soul among souls, not a resource among resources. Inward is not nostalgia for an era; eras had their own darkness. It is the recovery of a value structure: the deliberate, daily decision to put spirit over matter, in a world built to make that decision impossible.

“The system treats you as a battery: drained daily, recharged just enough to be drained again. Inward exists for one purpose — to unplug you, and to remind you what the energy was for.”

What Inward is — and is not

Inward is a compass and a companion, not a casino and not a church. It is a daily practice of liberation: first seeing the extraction clearly, then loosening its hold habit by habit, then awakening what the market cannot price, then living the realignment one ordinary day at a time. It borrows the wisdom of every tradition and the dogma of none, welcomes the believer and the honest atheist alike — and it remains the only app on your phone that wants to see you less.

THE · ARC · OF · LIBERATION

Four movements, one direction

Liberation is not an event but a sequence. The app is built as that sequence — and then as the daily loop that keeps it alive for years.

I SEE — The Mirror

A guided conversation and the Extraction Index measure, with mercy, how deep the system reaches into your days: feeds, series, games, betting, porn, substances, nightlife, shopping, outsourced thinking, abandoned skills, starved love. Conscious knowing comes first — you cannot leave a cage you cannot see.

II LOOSEN — The Untangling

A personal liberation plan: one extraction channel at a time, replaced rather than forbidden. Concrete habit swaps, escalating real-world dares, the Craving Button for the moment any pull arrives — and the patient rebuilding of skills the system let atrophy.

III AWAKEN — The Ascent

The spiritual movement: one deep reading a day, Paths of Study, silence, gratitude, awe, service. Cross-traditional, dogma-free — the wager that consciousness, love and moral weight are real, and that a life lived accordingly is measurably less empty.

IV LIVE — The Daily Return

The lifelong loop: one orientation each morning, one opportunity to change one thing each day, one reflection each night. The Needle shows your direction over weeks; the weekly Realignment shows where love, family and nature actually received your hours.

What does not change

Every covenant of the earlier editions binds this one: no feed, no ads, no data sold, no engagement-maximizing design, every screen ends, the app closes itself, all reflection data stays on the device, and success is measured by the day you need it less. Every new feature must pass the same test — does it return the person to their life, or capture them? Anything that captures is cut.

MOVEMENT · ONE · — · SEE

The Mirror: how deep are you in?

Conscious knowing of the problem is the first liberation. A map, never a verdict.

01 THE FIRST CONVERSATION

The Intake — by Companion or by quiz

Fifteen unhurried minutes, by guided conversation with the Companion or as a quiet questionnaire. No interrogation, no judgment — one honest question at a time about how the days actually pass: what fills the evenings, what the hand reaches for, what was once loved and is now postponed. The intake personalizes everything that follows.

02 TWELVE CHANNELS, ONE HARVEST

The Extraction Index

A merciful audit across the twelve channels of extraction: feeds & shorts · series & streaming · games & loot mechanics · betting & speculation · pornography & boundary-less sex · substances (smoking, alcohol, drugs) · nightlife & engineered fun · shopping & materialism · outsourced thinking (reflexive AI-dependence) · abandoned skills · spectator life · starved relationships. Each channel is scored not as sin but as depth of capture — and named for what it is: a system designed by experts to feed on you.

03 THE RESULT

A portrait written with mercy

The Mirror returns one page: where you are free, where you are leaking, where you are caught. It names the mechanism behind each capture — the variable reward, the engineered shame loop, the loneliness being monetized — because compulsion decoded is compulsion already weakening. It ends with one sentence of orientation and one suggested first step. Never a score to beat. Never shared. Never leaves the device.

04 THE HONEST LIMIT

Where the Mirror hands you on

Some captures are deeper than habit. Where the intake recognizes addiction, dependency or crisis — substances, gambling, compulsive sexuality, despair — the Mirror says so plainly and kindly, and points to professionals and local helplines first. Inward walks beside treatment; it never pretends to be it.

MOVEMENT · TWO · — · LOOSEN

The Untangling: habit by habit

Not deprivation — replacement. Every empty habit was feeding a real hunger.

05 ONE THREAD AT A TIME

The Liberation Plan

From the Mirror’s portrait, Inward proposes a sequence: one extraction channel per season, never all at once. For each, a concrete replacement habit, a daily micro-act, and an escalating dare. The plan is yours to edit — the app suggests, the person decides.

THE GREAT SWAPS

The midnight scroll	A walk, a page of a real book, a message to a real friend
The series binge	One chapter of one great story — then the screen ends
The bet, the loot box	A real-stakes dare: something slightly brave, today
Porn without boundaries	The Craving Button: decode the hunger — usually intimacy or rest
The cigarette, the drink	Breath work, water, movement — and honest tracking of the pull
Buying to feel something	Making something: cook, repair, build, write, plant
Asking AI before thinking	Think first, write your answer, then verify — the mind stays the author
Watching others live (sport, lives)	Playing, training, joining — participation over spectatorship

06 FOR THE MOMENT THE PULL ARRIVES

The Craving Button, universal

One tap for any craving — feed, bet, smoke, screen, purchase. Ninety seconds of breathing, then the one question: what are you actually hungry for? Then one real action. The urge is not defeated; it is decoded — and each decoding is written to the Evidence journal.

07 RECOVERING THE HANDS AND THE MIND

Build One Thing

A standing invitation to develop one real skill per season — an instrument, a language, a craft, a sport, a garden. Slow, unmeasured, weekly. The system profits when you can do nothing for yourself; every recovered skill is territory taken back.

MOVEMENT · THREE · — · AWAKEN

The Ascent: what the market cannot price

Liberation from is only half a life. The other half is liberation toward.

An emptied habit leaves a hollow, and the system is patient — it will refill any hollow left unguarded. So the third movement fills it deliberately, with the one thing extraction can neither manufacture nor monetize: the life of the spirit. Inward asserts no doctrine. It makes one wager any honest materialist can entertain — that consciousness, love and moral weight are not reducible to chemistry, and that a life lived as if they matter is measurably less empty.

08 THE ANTI-FEED

One Deep Thing

One reading per day, never two: Heschel today, Rumi tomorrow, then Dostoevsky, Black Elk, the Tao, the Gospels, the suttas, and the great secular voices beside them. No swiping to the next. When it ends, the screen goes dark and says: now go live it.

09 GUIDED JOURNEYS, 7 – 14 DAYS

Paths of Awakening

Short structured journeys for the third movement: The Soul in the Age of Machines · Remembering What We Knew · What Is Enough? · Love as a Practice · The Discipline of Awe · Service as the Oldest Medicine. Each day is one reading, one question, one real-world act — study that does not become life is not study.

10 THE FOUR PRACTICES

Silence · Gratitude · Awe · Service

Daily micro-practices, sixty seconds to begin: a held silence before the first screen of the day; three named gratitudes at night; one deliberate encounter with beauty or nature per week; one unrewarded act of kindness. Believers may pray, meditators may sit, the unsure may simply be still — the door is the same.

11 COUNSEL AT 2 A.M.

The Companion, in the third movement

The guide untangles priority conflicts, sits with you through the dark hours, answers questions about the readings with honesty about what is contested — and ends conversations. When the real move belongs in the real world, it says so and stops: “This sounds like something to say to your brother, not to me. Go say it.”

MOVEMENT · FOUR · — · LIVE

The Daily Return: tracking the turn

One opportunity, every day, to change one thing — and the patient evidence that you did.

12 SIXTY SECONDS, MORNING AND NIGHT

The Compass

One quiet question each morning: what will you give your attention to today? One reflection each night: did today move toward spirit — presence, love, depth — or toward matter — speed, accumulation, distraction? No scores, no streaks. A direction, not a grade.

13 ONE CHANCE PER DAY

Today's Opening

Each day the app offers exactly one opportunity drawn from your liberation plan: one swap to attempt, one dare to take, one practice to hold, one person to reach. Finishable today, slightly brave, then the app closes itself. The bar to “I did something real today” stays lower than the bar to opening the feed.

14 YOUR OWN PROOF

The Needle & the Evidence Journal

Over weeks, the Needle shows your direction turning — capture scores easing, real hours returning. The Evidence journal collects your own words: the walk that felt like waking up, the evening that didn't end in the scroll. When resolve weakens, the Companion reflects your own evidence back to you. Nothing persuades like your former self.

15 THE WEEKLY REALIGNMENT

Where did the hours actually go?

Once a week, with your permission, the Attention Ledger shows where time and money truly flowed — framed as a spiritual ledger, not productivity analytics: this is what you treated as ultimate, in practice. Beside it, the values you chose: love, family, nature, craft, friends. The gap is the homework. The data never leaves your device.

16 REST AS REBELLION

The Quiet: Unplug, Detox, Stillness

The instant exit — one tap, two hours of nothing. The structured exit — a guided 7, 14 or 30-day Dopamine Detox across your red list. And the recurring exit — one protected period of rest per week, designed once and defended by the app, during which Inward itself goes dark except for a single contemplative line.

What the system sold us — and what we take back

Not nostalgia. A value structure, recovered deliberately, one week at a time.

VALUE	WHAT THE SYSTEM MADE OF IT	HOW INWARD RETURNS IT
LOVE	Swiped, streamed, simulated	Practiced — one true sentence to one real person
FAMILY	Outbid by the glowing screen at dinner	The screen-free table; the protected evening
COMPASSION	Outrage as engagement fuel	One unrewarded act of kindness, weekly
FRIENDSHIP	Followers, likes, audience	A circle of eight — no likes, no performance
HOME	A place to charge devices	A place of rest the Stillness Switch defends
NATURE	A backdrop for content	The headphone-less walk; the discipline of awe
KINDNESS	Optimized out as friction	Re-installed as a daily micro-practice
EMPATHY	Numbed by infinite spectacle	Re-trained by presence — one person, fully heard

“Societies do not change through viral content; they change through small groups of people quietly living differently — and being noticed. Every person who realigns becomes the advertisement no budget can buy: calmer, freer, harder to manipulate, visibly alive.”

A compass with no hidden magnet

An app against extraction must be structurally incapable of extracting.

No advertising, ever.

Attention is the patient here, not the product.

No sale or sharing of personal data, ever.

The Mirror, the Ledger, the journal — all on-device, erased in one tap, never used for training or marketing.

No engagement-maximizing design, ever.

No feed, no infinity, no streak anxiety, no red badges. Every screen ends; the app closes itself.

Shame is banned.

Compulsion is not a character verdict — these systems were built by experts to hook you. Inward interrupts the spiral with kindness and one honest question.

Success means needing it less.

The published metric is reverse retention: how many users, after a year, spend less time on all screens — including this one.

The Open Hand — how it stays alive

Everything is free, for everyone, forever — no locked features, no premium tier; a paywall on a compass for the soul would be grotesque. Once a month, at a good moment and never during a craving, one quiet screen invites those who can to carry it: €3 · €8 · €15 · your amount · not this month. One tap declines it, fully respected, for thirty days. Payers and non-payers receive identical apps. Patronage converts exactly where the product visibly refuses to exploit — the covenant is the conversion engine.

The sharpest objections, faced

“A wellbeing app is itself a product of the system it critiques.” True — and the answer is structural: free, ad-free, data-free, with a published reverse-retention report. “This is religion smuggled into software.” No doctrine is asserted; every tradition is quoted, none enforced; the atheist who wants their evenings back is fully at home. “Slowing down is a luxury of the comfortable.” The system preys hardest on the poor, the lonely and the young — reclaiming attention is the cheapest liberation there is, which is why Inward must never be priced like a luxury. “Technology also relieves suffering.” It does, and Inward is technology. The enemy is not the tool but the business model that converts human weakness into revenue.

You were not made to be a battery. You were made to be alive.

*Inward will never sell your attention, your data, or your loneliness.
It will show you the cage, hand you the file, and point past the bars — to love, family, friendship, home, nature, kindness, empathy:
the values that were never lost, only drowned out.
Its only measure of success is the day you need it less — because your life has grown bigger than your screen.*
