

INWARD

PRODUCT DEFINITION 2.0 — THE ECOSYSTEM

---

*One compass, five rooms — a whole house for reordering a life.
Free for everyone. Carried by those who can.*

FROM APP TO ECOSYSTEM

One compass, five rooms

Inward 1.0 was a daily practice. Inward 2.0 is a whole house for reordering a life — and the compass still stands at its center.

The diagnosis has not changed: attention is being farmed, and the harvest is paid for in empty evenings. What changes in 2.0 is the depth of the answer. A person who wants out of the dopamine economy needs more than a daily question — they need teaching (the Library), counsel (the Companion), a body that cooperates (the Body), and trained silence (the Quiet). Five rooms, one house, one direction.

| ROOM          | WHAT LIVES THERE                                              | REPLACES                                       |
|---------------|---------------------------------------------------------------|------------------------------------------------|
| The Compass   | Daily orientation · Craving Button · Dares · Evidence journal | The morning &amp; bedtime scroll        |
| The Library   | The e-book · Paths of Study · quizzes                         | Infinite shallow content                |
| The Companion | A guide for priorities, cravings & meaning                    | Doomscrolling your problems at 2 a.m.   |
| The Body      | Sleep ritual · walking · slow food · breath                   | Optimization obsession                  |
| The Quiet     | Dopamine Detox · Unplug Mode · Stillness Switch               | Being always reachable, always for sale |

What does not change

Every covenant of 1.0 binds 2.0: no feed, no ads, no data sold, no engagement-maximizing design, every screen ends, the app closes itself, success is measured by the day you need it less. New features must pass the same test: does this return the person to their life, or capture them? Anything that captures is cut.

ROOM TWO — THE LIBRARY

The book lives inside the app

Education by drip, never by binge.

THE SOURCE TEXT, BEAUTIFULLY SET

01 The e-book: Spirit Over Matter

The full book, typeset like a fine print edition — paper background, serif text, generous margins. Chapters release one per day of reading rhythm, deliberately: you cannot binge wisdom. Each chapter ends with one question that flows into the evening Compass. The book markets the app; the app embodies the book.

MINI-COURSES, 7-14 DAYS

02 Paths of Study

Short guided journeys: Reordering Your Priorities · The Dopamine Detox · What Is Enough? · Love as a Practice · Attention Is Your Life · The Temptation to Become Gods. Each day = one short reading + one question + one real-world act. Completing a Path writes to the Evidence journal — study that does not become life is not study.

THE MIRROR, NOT THE GRADE

03 Quizzes

Four kinds: the intake quiz (personalizes everything at onboarding) · the attention audit — “How farmed is your attention?” — 12 questions, beautiful, shareable, the single best top-of-funnel asset the product owns · the values quiz — “What do you actually treat as ultimate?” — confronting stated versus lived values · end-of-Path reflections, never scored. Results are written with mercy and end with one suggested next step, never a sales pitch.

Content engine

All Library content ships as versioned, editor-curated data — new Paths, questions and quizzes arrive over the air without app updates. The canon remains deliberately cross-traditional: every tradition quoted with reverence, none enforced, secular and literary voices as first-class citizens.

ROOM THREE — THE COMPANION

The only chatbot designed to end conversations

A guide in the app's voice: warm, slow, cross-traditional, never preachy — and never a substitute for humans.

What it does

Untangles priority conflicts (“I keep choosing work over my kids and I hate it”) by asking questions before offering counsel. Sits with you through a 2 a.m. craving when the button alone isn’t enough. Helps design personal dares and choose Paths. Reflects your own Evidence journal back to you: “Three months ago you wrote that the walk felt like waking up. You’ve stopped walking.” Answers questions about the readings and traditions with honesty about what is contested.

What it refuses

It does not diagnose. It does not replace therapy, medicine, or clergy. It does not chat for chatting’s sake — when the real move belongs in the real world, it says so and stops: “This sounds like something to say to your brother, not to me. Go say it.” Sessions end; there is no streak of conversation, no nudge to return.

Safety rails (non-negotiable)

Medical and mental-health crises are recognized and redirected to professionals and local helplines, immediately and kindly. Health guidance stays general; anything clinical gets “that’s a question for a doctor — and worth asking this week.” Conversations are stored on-device only, erased with everything else in one tap, and never used for training or marketing.

“Most chatbots are designed to keep you talking. This one is designed to send you back — to the person, the task, the silence — where the answer actually lives.”

ROOMS FOUR &amp; FIVE — THE BODY AND THE QUIET

A body that cooperates, a silence that trains

Spirit over matter does not mean against the body. The body is where attention lives.

THE BODY

04 Sleep, the first discipline

A wind-down ritual that replaces the bedtime scroll: screens dim, one closing line, optional breath work, the phone goes to bed before you do. No sleep scores, no graphs — the metric is how the morning feels.

THE BODY

05 Walking as moving meditation

Progressive walking practice, headphones optional but discouraged. Prompts arrive before, not during: “Walk until you notice three things you’ve never seen on this street.”

THE BODY

06 Slow food, no numbers

Real food, eaten slowly, ideally with people. No calorie counting, ever — the only question is “did you taste it?” Anti-obsessive by design; the app refuses to become another body-anxiety machine.

THE QUIET

07 The Dopamine Detox

A guided, structured program — 7, 14, or 30 days — of progressive fasting from the red list: shorter feeds first, then games, then all of it. Daily check-in, Companion support, Evidence entries. Ends with the question that runs the whole product: “how does this feel compared to before?”

THE QUIET

08 Unplug Mode

The instant version: one tap — “give me two hours of nothing” — and the phone goes quiet, the app goes dark, a single line remains. For the moments you feel the pull and want out now.

THE QUIET

09 The Stillness Switch

The recurring protected rest period — weekly, designed once, defended by the app. Religion-neutral by name, welcoming to every tradition’s day of rest, and to those who simply want one day off from being for sale.

MONETIZATION — THE OPEN HAND

Free for everyone. Carried by those who can.

Pay-what-you-want patronage — the only model that does not contradict the covenant.

Everything is free. No locked features, no premium tier, no trial countdown — a paywall on a compass for the soul would be grotesque, and every user would feel it. Instead, once a month, and only if the person has not contributed that month, one quiet screen appears at a good moment — after a completed dare or reading, never during a craving, never in the Quiet.

THE MONTHLY ASK — THE ENTIRE PRESSURE SYSTEM, SHOWN AT ACTUAL INTENSITY

The rules of the ask

Not this month is one tap, fully respected — no guilt copy, no second ask for 30 days. Payers and non-payers receive identical apps, forever. One transparency line — “supported by 14,200 people this month” — because generosity is contagious and honesty is the brand. One slightly warmer annual letter is permitted. That is the entire machinery. The model works for the same reason Wikipedia and Signal work: patronage converts exactly where the product visibly refuses to exploit — the covenant is the conversion engine.

Planning numbers

Assume 2–5% of monthly active users contributing, averaging near the €8 anchor. At 100,000 MAU that is roughly €19,000–€40,000 per month — a small, focused team, funded by trust. Growth therefore matters; the next page is how it happens without selling anyone.

GROWTH — THE TORCH

Every user a torchbearer — none of them a salesperson

The referral engine, refueled: programmatic tracking, meaning instead of commission.

Why not cash commissions

A cash-affiliate scheme — get paid when people you recruit pay — would quietly kill the product. The moment a share earns money, every share becomes an ad; trust collapses; the app has rebuilt the exact machinery it exists to oppose, with users farming each other. The instinct, though, is right: make every user a propagator, track it programmatically, reward it. Only the fuel changes.

How the Torch works

THE MECHANIC

O1 Pass the torch

Every user holds a personal invite link. Downloads and contributions that flow through it are tracked exactly like an affiliate program — same attribution, same dashboard, different payout.

THE PAYOUT, OPTION A

O2 Commission as gift

30% of first-year contributions from the people you brought flows to a cause you choose from a vetted list — digital wellbeing for children, mental-health access, literacy. Your impact ledger shows what your torch has funded.

THE PAYOUT, OPTION B

O3 Carrying others

Each contributing person you bring “carries” a free month for someone in a low-income country — visible in your ledger as people, not points.

THE PAYOUT, OPTION C

O4 Recognition in kind

Early access to new Paths; at milestones, a printed edition of the book. Modest by design — the reward must never be worth lying for.

People share harder for meaning than for €2 commissions — and every share stays credible because the sharer visibly gains no money. If a direct cash channel is wanted, confine it to a small, disclosed ambassador program for vetted multipliers — coaches, teachers, pastors, therapists — who would recommend the app anyway. Never a general user mechanic.

A product that wins by being trusted —
and trusted because it refuses to exploit.

---

The book feeds the app. The quizzes open the door.
The Open Hand keeps it alive. The Torch carries it onward.
Four engines, one fuel: trust.

SPIRIT OVER MATTER — THE SOUL LEADS, THE WORLD SLOWS